I hope many of you are able to make our rescheduled lobby day, and I look forward to joining many of you for regional awareness rallies next month. Just like the last forty years, we have a lot to do this year. The more things change doesn't have to be the more things stay the same: unless you let it. Until next month...Ride Free

"Because they might kick him out of the club." Dee pulled a cigarette out of her jacket pocket and lit it.

"Who are they?" Ellen asked.

"The other presidents. Whatever they decide to do, Rambo's got to abide by it." Dee took a long drag off the cigarette and exhaled.

"Why would they want to kick him out? What did he do?" Ellen asked.

"Shooting that rifle off." Mad Dog took a long drink from the whiskey bottle. "I don't think he had much of a choice, Dee. I really don't."

"I hope the others see things the way you do, Mad Dog. I kinda like that guy." Dee Dee blew rings of smoke into the air and watched them dismantle.
