

National Motorcycle Museum in Anamosa, IA.

If your looking for somewhere to go for the day or an overnigher, let me suggest the National Motorcycle Museum in Anamosa, IA. Lorie and I along with the BAANKERS checked out the museum on a getaway weekend that made for good times and relaxation.

We all checked out the museum last year over Labor Day weekend, which worked out great because I missed a bunch of items the first time I went through solo. My suggestion is to set aside a couple of hours for a run into the past. With bikes from all times of the industry dating back to 1903 and era's like the Evil Knievel display, the Easyriders display, toys, artifacts and everything in between. Let's just say this place is like going through a time warp and landing in the middle of a reflection of all you remember in your past pertaining to riding. Remember that little motorcycle toy you spent hours in the dirt with. How about the carnival when you were 6 or 7, and the merry-go-round had your earliest visions of freedom. This is the kind of place I am talking about. Flash-back time baby. Remeniscence!

A little History on the museum taken from their website www.nationalmcmuseum.org

The National Motorcycle Museum & Hall of Fame was founded in 1989 by people who love motorcycling. In the fall of 1999, the Museum moved from Sturgis, SD, to Anamosa, IA. The Board of Directors and Museum staff are committed to the builders, racers and riders who laid the groundwork for what motorcycling has become. Their passion lives on through documentation, education and preservation.

In the fall of 2004, the Hall of Fame was merged with the Motorcycle Hall of Fame Museum in Pickerington, Ohio. All other exhibits, motorcycles and memorabilia remained in Anamosa. Only the Hall of Fame inductees moved to the Ohio Museum.

So if your looking for a different kind of adventure, head over to Anamosa and check out our motorcycle history. For $7 bucks it's well worth it.
