

No Clue

I received this the other day from a Brother and after reading it realized this idiot didn't have a clue what he was talking about, as well as insulting a lot of Veterans who served in "The Nam". So here it is you decide.

Apocalypse again -- call up the Vietnam vets

Where else can Bush get 21,500 trained soldiers for his 'surge'?

LISTENING TO President Bush's speech on Iraq earlier this month, my first thought was: "Where the heck are we going to get 21,500 more soldiers to send to Iraq?" Our Reserves are depleted, our National Guard is worn out, our Army and Marine Corps are stretched to the limit. Then it hit me: Re-up our Vietnam War veterans and send them.

They're trained. They're battle-hardened. Many already have post-traumatic stress disorder. Also, some have their own vehicles — Harleys mostly, which are cheap to run, make small targets and are highly mobile. I'll even bet that lots of these guys still have guns (you know, just in case).

OK, some vets are a bit long in the tooth (or don't have teeth — because of Agent Orange?). Or their eyesight isn't what it was. Or their reflexes have slowed. But with today's modern weaponry, how well do you have to see? Too out of shape, you say? Listen, if Rocky Balboa can step back into the ring at age 60, all these Vietnam War vets need is a little boot-camp magic and they'll be good to go. I mean, who doesn't want to drop a few pounds?

Don't want geezers fighting for us? Well, let's face it, our young people have greater value right here. Most of us want to retire and collect our hard-earned Social Security, and we need those youngsters here, working and paying taxes — lots of taxes.

Finally, these Vietnam War guys are hungry for revenge. After all, they fought in the only war the U.S. ever lost. And they didn't even get a parade. So this is their chance. We can throw them that big parade when they come marching home.

Read for yourself, if it is still listed on their site. I wrote this reply and he didn't have the guts to reply, or he was to busy eating donuts.

Concerning your article, do you even have a clue what the hell your talking about? As far as "Lost A War" when I left after two tours and having nine team members killed, we were winning, the American G.I. did not lose Vietnam, it was lost by the American Government and their policy. As far as the Vietnam Vet going over to take care of business, 1000's of my Brothers and myself volunteered to do just that. Your remark about having guns, yes some of us do, as well as Korean Vets, WW II Vets, and thousands of Americans. It is a RIGHT to bear Arms in the United States, unless you are a convicted felon.

Why don't you get off your fat butt and out from behind your desk and enlist, that way the United States would only need 21,499 more troops. I'm sure with a few less donuts and some basic training you might be able to make it, but I really doubt it.
