The ride seemed to be going smooth, but he just couldn't shake that chill. But like he thought to himself "nothing is going to stop me!"

It's 11:30, only 2 hrs to go and I'll be in Sturgis he thought to himself, partyin' and having a good time. Just then that chill came back in away that paralyzed Cheech to where he could not move. Doing 70 Cheech missed a turn and went into a ravine. As he lay there in a pool of blood, a pile of twisted metal that was his pride and joy laying on top of him. Cheech thought to himself, "Well I now know what that woman was trying to tell me, I guess I won't make it to Sturgis after all," as he drifted into uncountiousness.

Three weeks later Cheech woke up in a hospital bed, not being able to remember any of the events that led him there. All he knew was that his leg in a cast suspended in the air, one arm casted and his head wrapped up like a mummy.

Finally a nurse walked in and tried to convey to Cheech what had happened and that he was lucky to be alive.

Not long after there was a knock on the door. The door opened and immediately the room was filled to capacity with strangers that Cheech had never seen before. One woman who seemed to be the spokesman for the strangers came over and took Cheech's hand, and with a warm smile stated, "We all wanted to come and say hello after we had gotten a call from your employer, Angel Trucking. They were concerned that you had not returned home."

So we checked around and finally found you here. Nobody knows how you got here, but an Angel must be watching over you!"

After awhile the woman said to Cheech, " We have something for you. We found out that for many years you had worked hard to build a dream bike for Sturgis, well it's not quite the same as yours but look in the parking lot anyway!" The woman drew the curtain and when he looked out he saw glistening in the sun a beautiful '50 pan. Not knowing what to say the woman whispered in his ear "I am here for you, whenever you need me I'll be here!" Just then a loud applause swept through the crowd, and before he could say another word the woman was gone.

A few months later he was headed for Michigan with a grin from ear to ear. He was going to listen to his heart from now on, for he knows his angel is riding along with him in the wind
